He has not been named. A Scotland Yard spokesman said: "The man, who is in his 20s, has been arrested on suspicion of rape."

Police arrested Ronaldo on October 19 after he went to West Didsbury police station in south Manchester.

He gave a DNA sample, was fingerprinted and spent nine hours in custody but claims he is "totally innocent" of rape.
Police are now in discussion with the Crown Prosecution Service about whether to bring charges.

Time's called on ban

by MACER HALL
PLANS to ban boozing on all public transport have been dropped by the Government.
The Prime Minister revealed the idea had been ditched when he was tackled in the Commons by Tory leader Michael Howard, 64.
Tony Blair, 52, said the plan had been put to him but he had already decided it was not acceptable.
The disclosure came as the Opposition leader taunted the Prime Minister over his alleged loss of Cabinet allies and his authority over the Government.
Mr Blair said: "In respect of the so-called proposal for banning drinking on public transport - this was a proposal put to me that, incidentally, I'd already indicated we should not accept."

because of a lack of vitamin D.

The vitamin is absorbed through sunlight and Britons can't get enough in winter.

At a health meeting in central London, Professor Johan Moan from the Institute for Cancer Research in Oslo, Norway, said: "There are many dis-

Prof Richard Strange, from Keele University Medical School, Staffs, said: "We need to get people into realising that low levels of sunlight can be beneficial without getting into the realms of skin cancer."
Men with light skin and freckles have the least risk of prostate cancer, presumably because they use the weakest sunlight to produce vitamin D.

WHEN my 24-year old girlfriend started talking about getting a flat, assumed she meant with me. But now she's gone and put down the deposit on a tiny studio flat – just for her. She says that she intends to live alone and suggests that I do the same. I've always known

I've always known that she's very set in her ways and has hated sharing flats with her mates. But I honestly thought that when she eventually purchased somewhere, it would be with me. with me.

I just find it really insulting. Why would she want to be on her own when she could have me to cuddle up to every night?

She says it's not about rejecting me, just her needing her space. But that old hippy rubbish doesn't wash with me.

I think that I've been dumped, only she hasn't got the guts to tell me to my face.

JANE SAYS: I really don't think that this is such a big deal. Your girlfriend is only 24 and presumably doesn't intend to live

No wedding but he still wants sex

EXACTLY one week after accepting my boyfriend's proposal to marry him, he changed his mind.

He suddenly turned up at my flat and said rather dramatically that we needed to have a talk.

He explained to me that he'd needed to have a talk.

He explained to me that he'd made a dreadful mistake and didn't really want to marry me after all.

He said that the thought of spending the rest of his life with me – and, more significantly, never having sex with another woman – terrified him. He said he'd like us to go back to what we had before, with no commitment on his part.

And with that he slipped my diamond ring off my finger and left.

I was so shocked that I just sat and stared at my bedroom wall and sobbed.

But apparently we're not going to have our spring wedding after all – and I'm not to keep going on about it.
I'm 22 and can't work out where this leaves us.
I thought that we were in love and that we had a future, but obviously that is not the case.

I feel such an idiot, especially as I told loads of people about the engagement and now I've had to "untell" them again.

What really hurts is that not only has he dumped me, but I now hear - via a friend - that he has taken the ring back to the jewellers.

Apparently he told the shop assistant that I'd turned him down and used the credit note to buy himself a new watch.
My mum says that I should cling on in the hope that he'll change his mind again in the future.
But am I wasting my time?

But am I wasting my time's

But am I wasting my time?

JANE SAYS: Exactly which century is your mother from? Why on earth would you want to wait a second longer for this moron? He's nothing but a cruel hoaxer.

One minute he's dangling love, commitment and a future in front of you, the next he's snatching it away again. He's obviously not someone you can trust or rely on. He only thinks about himself and doesn't give a hoot for your feelings. I think that this would be the perfect time to draw a final line under this relationship. He's successfully hurt, humiliated and disappointed you, so what's the point in carrying on?

You and he simply don't have a future together as he's made it perfectly clear that you're not 'the one'. If he's just after a female that he can socialise and

But a friend has told me that I should. She's warned me that there are a group of single, young girls – groupies if you like – who follow the team around and join them in the pub. Apparently one of them is a right old tart who invites anyone who's interested back to her flat for sex.

A couple of times, my fella hasn't got home until 10pm.

I'm worried that he's cheating on me with this slag, but he refuses to confess.

MIKE BASSETT: MANAGER: ITV1, 10pm

KE WA

TO WATCH

THE gaffer faces a crisis of David Moyes-like roportions in tonight's final pisode of MIKE BASSETT:

episode of MIKE BASSETT: MANAGER (ITV1, 10pm). With just one game left, it seems only a miracle can save Wirral County from the drop, and poor Bassett looks on the brink of going barmy. To make matters worse, the doddering old club chairman avoids death's door long enough to make an alarming confession from his hospital bed, revealing that Bassett's "hero" of a dad deliberately missed his penalty in the 1956 FA Cup Final, a generous bung having persuaded him to throw the match. Stunned and disillusioned to the point of despair, Bassett then turns for comfort to Karine, only to discover she has a shock discover she has a shock revelation of her own. revelation of her own.

EARLIER, on BBC1, Harry commits a major blunder in SPOOKS (9pm). Not for the first time, he's far from happy about the Yanks throwing their weight around, so when he catches them trying to lilegally extradite a prisoner from the UK he dives in and gets the bloke freed. Fair enough, only this prisoner then enough, only this prisoner then kind of kills the bunch from M15 who are meant to be keeping an eye on him. (D'oh!) The price for this cock-up, as far as Harry's career is concerned, looks likely to be a high one – there's an automatic suspension, for starters, with Juliet being urged to give him the permanent boot.

FINALLY, if you're a big fan of EMMERDALE (and if you're not, what the hell's the matter with you?), there's a nice tribute tonight (7.30pm) to the late Stan Reynolds, who played Seth Armstrong in the ITV1 soap for 27 years. Along with classic clips, we hear from the likes of Mark Charnock (Marlon), Steve clips, we lear from the likes of Mark Charnock (Marlon), Steve Halliwell (Zak), Richard Thorp (Turner) and, of course, Paula Tilbrook (Betty).

TV GUIDE:

Rome – you'd need to ask an ancient Roman. But the battles looked like battles and the crowds looked like crowds. The behaviour of the characters also reminded us we were in the heart of an ancient city. People routinely made sacri-fices to the gods – in one ghastly scene, Attia, sister of Julius Caesar, took a shower in the blood of a bullock.

Snooty

Even if modern civilisation grew from the ruins of this place, watching Rome makes you quite glad things have moved on a bit. The main story is a power struggle between Caesar and Pompey. Caesar (Claran Hinds) is a war-hero, who has won the adoration of the mob for his campaigns, while Pompey (Kenneth Cranham) is a stuff-shirt, surrounded by snooty senators. It's not the first time the BBC has had a go at ancient Rome. In 1976, there was 'I Claudius'. The script was superb, but the sets wobbled every time an angry Empress slammed a door Yet people still loved it. Rome is technically brilliant. But it moves the goalposts into Hollywood territory. The next time someone has an ambitious idea for a historical series, the BBC will fund it only if they have several millions spare – because it 'won't look as good as Rome'. Thirty years ago, they'd have just had a go. And rightly so. You don't need the resources of an Empire to make good drama.

...ON LAST NIGHT'S T

YOU might have thought the 'cast of thousands' was something that disappeared with the legendary Cecil B. DeMille. But ROME, BBC2's new epic series, showed that TV could be just as ambitious, provided you've got top US channel HBO lending a hand.

It wasn't just the cast that was enormous: there was a producer, a consulting producer, four co-producers and four executive producers and four executive producers. Lord knows what they all do – produce, probably – but it made the opening credits very long. Once you started to watch, it was clear that the legions of people who'd made this show were very necessary. It would be impossible to say whether it truly re-created all the sights, sounds and smells of ancient window called Wasp Noises From Around The World.

THE world's top authority on wasps is passing a charity shop when he sees a record in the window called Wasp Noises From Around The World.

Intrigued, he goes in, introduces himself as a wasp expert and asks the shop assistant to put the record on.

After listening to the first track for a while, the man is confused. He says: "I don't recognise any of these noises. Can you play the next track for me?"

The assistant obliges and skips on to the next track. After a while, the expert is still confused. They skip on again, but he still doesn't recognise the noises. Then the assistant looks at the turntable and says: "Oh, I'm very sorry, I had it on the bee side."
